

Charlie made plans to go to the street fair. It came every year to his town, and it was the most fun event of the summer. The best part about going to the street fair is that Charlie was now allowed to go with his friends. He used to have to go with his mother, father, and worst of all, his little sister. His sister was a pain and she was always getting Charlie into trouble.

This summer, Charlie was going with Tommy and Rudy to the street fair. Charlie had saved ten dollars to use as spending money, and he was going to meet Tommy and Rudy in the morning in front of the drug store.

Charlie woke up the next morning and began getting ready for the outing. He put on shorts and a sleeveless T-shirt because he knew it would get hot. Then he put on a baseball cap and his tennis shoes. He met Tommy and Rudy in front of the drug store, and from there they traveled down Broad Street. Then they turned down Church Street and paid the man so that they could pass through the gates to the street fair.

There were people everywhere and some of them were their friends from school. Tommy said that he hoped they would see Laura, his girlfriend from school. Rudy said he was sort of looking for Sarah, and Charlie said he was keeping an eye out for his parents so that he could avoid them, if possible.

The boys went first to the stage area where they heard the bands playing, but the band that was playing, for the moment, was just too loud. The boys decided to move on down the street to the food area. There were booths selling all types of food. The boys couldn't decide what they wanted to eat. They saw tacos, pizza, ribs, chicken, salad bars, fruit bars, spaghetti, and more. The hot dog and hamburger stands were on down the street, too. Charlie wanted pizza and the other boys agreed, so they each bought a slice and a can of soda.

For the rest of the afternoon, they wandered up and down the streets looking at all the unusual arts and crafts that people were selling. The street fair was exciting, and Charlie was happy that his parents had allowed him to come.

Charlie made plans to go to the street fair. It came every year to	14 his town, and it was the most fun event of the summer. The best part	29 about going to the street fair is that Charlie was now allowed to go with	44 his friends. He used to have to go with his mother, father, and worst of	59
all, his little sister. His sister was a pain and she was always getting	73
Charlie into trouble.	76
This summer, Charlie was going with Tommy and Rudy to the	87 street fair. Charlie had saved ten dollars to use as spending money, and	100
he was going to meet Tommy and Rudy in the morning in front of the	115
drug store.	117
Charlie woke up the next morning and began getting ready for	128
the outing. He put on shorts and a sleeveless T-shirt because he knew	142
it would get hot. Then he put on a baseball cap and his tennis shoes.	157
He met Tommy and Rudy in front of the drug store, and from there	171 they traveled down Broad Street. Then they turned down Church	181
Street and paid the man so that they could pass through the gates to the	196
street fair.	198
There were people everywhere and some of them were their	208 friends from school. Tommy said that he hoped they would see Laura,	220 his girlfriend from school. Rudy said he was sort of looking for Sarah,	233 and Charlie said he was keeping an eye out for his parents so that he	248 could avoid them, if possible.	253
The boys went first to the stage area where they heard the bands	266 playing, but the band that was playing, for the moment, was just too	279 loud. The boys decided to move on down the street to the food area.	293
There were booths selling all types of food. The boys couldn't decide	305 what they wanted to eat. They saw tacos, pizza, ribs, chicken, salad	317 bars, fruit bars, spaghetti, and more. The hot dog and hamburger	328 stands were on down the street, too. Charlie wanted pizza and the	340 other boys agreed, so they each bought a slice and a can of soda.	354

For the rest of the afternoon, they wandered up and down the	366 streets looking at all the unusual arts and crafts that people were	378 selling. The street fair was exciting, and Charlie was happy that his	390 parents had allowed him to come.	396