

Jenny lived in a cave. It was big and very close to a waterfall. Jenny had long hair. It dragged on the floor of the cave. Jenny liked to wear flowers in her hair. She picked them from the jungle each day. Some days she did not wear flowers in her hair. She wore a crown of gold. Jenny was Queen of the African Jungle.

Jenny had gone on a trip to Africa when she was a baby. Her parents had taken her. She had been a pretty baby, so the Zora tribe had stolen her. The Zoras had wanted a baby queen. Jenny had had everything a baby could want. They had made her toys and had fed her food.

Jenny had started to grow. She liked to play in the jungle. She would swing from the long vines in the trees. She played with monkeys. She even rode zebras. Jenny liked living in the jungle.

One day the young queen was playing with a lion. A Zora came to Jenny and said that there was a problem. There was a big elephant in the river. He sprayed people with water. He would not stop. The Zora asked Queen Jenny to help. "OK," said Queen Jenny.

Jenny tried to throw things at the elephant. She threw rocks. She threw sticks, too. They did not scare the elephant away. He sprayed Jenny with water. Then Jenny had an idea. She climbed a tree. Then she grabbed a vine. She swung out on the vine and landed on top of the elephant. She tied a rope around the elephant. Then she led him away into the jungle.

The Zoras cheered for Queen Jenny. She was a hero. They had a parade. All the children danced for Jenny. She smiled and waved to all.

"Jenny, Jenny Smith. I asked you a question. Are you daydreaming again?" Miss Green had a frown on her face.

"I am sorry, Miss Green. I will not daydream anymore." Jenny smiled and thought about being Queen of the Jungle again.
