Keeney Street School goes MAD for science...

Mad Science was back this year with a new show called “Sounds Like Science”. The audience got to participate and make some noise while they explored the science behind sound.

Olivia, Liam and Brooke were used to demonstrate how polymers absorb water. They balanced cups on their head while the Mad Scientist poured water into one of the cups. Magically, all the kids stayed dry.

Gabrielle and Tristan swung tubes in the air to make great sounds. We found out why some tubes made sounds and others didn't.

The Mad Scientist made a pickle glow, showed us spontaneous combustion and had kids create sound effects from a thunderstorm.

The night ended with a potato launch between brother and sister, Tyler and Amber.
